WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2. 1737.

9th - 35.

A Mail arrived Yesterday from Holland.

HE Letters from Vienna, of which the freshest are dated the 15th ult. O. S. confirm the Blackade of Nissa by the Turks; but they say, that they have no Artillery to besiege it, and that tho' the Place is not furnish'd with above a Month's Provision, the Governor has obtained 15 Days time instead of only 10 that were allowed at first to wait for Orders from the Emperor's Chief General.

As for the other Advices from thence, there are none more remarkable than the following Account printed at Vienna, of the Gallant Defence made by the St. Charles Man of War against several Turkish Vessels who attack'd her for three Days together, and were supported by several Batteries that the Infidels had raised upon the Banks of the Danube.

The St. Charles Man of War which had cruised some time near Widdin, together with another call'd the St. Elizabeth, having received Orders to retire under the Cannon of Orfova, weigh'd Anchor the 29th of September N. S. and was actually preparing to follow the St. Elizabeth, which steer'd that Course the Night before. But she had scarce set Sail, when she was surrounded in a manner by 19 Turkish Vessels, call'd Saicks, which attack'd her with a great deal of Fury. The Captain Merlo (who is a Genoese) that commanded her, received them with all the Bravery imaginable. He made several Discharges upon the Turkish Vessels from his Artillery, consisting of 18 Cannon of 4, 8, and 12 Pounders, which he loaded with Cartridge Shot, as fast as the Saicks bore up to his Ship. The Troops that were on board made a continual Fire likewise upon the Enemy; so that in the Evening they were forced to retire with a considerable Loss, tho' they had been supported by a Battery of 4 Guns from the Shore.

The St. Charles took advantage of the Night to pursue her Course; but cou'd not make much Way, because she strove against the Stream: And on the 30th at Day-break, she was again attack'd by the same Saicks, reinforced by 9 others. The Turks made all the Efforts they could to board her; but were repulsed as often as they came on, by the terrible and continual Fire of the Sailors and Soldiers that she had on board. Upon this Occasion the Enemy lost a great many Men, but their Forces being incessantly refreshed by Recruits from the Shore, they return'd several Times to the Charge, being then also supported by two fresh Batteries, one of 4 Guns, and the other of 3; yet all their Efforts were to no Purpose. During this, the Ship was arrived near the Isle of Ostrovo, where the Turks put a great Number of Soldiers ashore, who made a furious Fire upon the St. Charles, which was by this Means attack'd in a terrible Manner from three Places at once, viz. by the Troops that were in the Island, by those from the Shore, and by the Hands on board the Saicks; but she defended herself so well, that the Turks were at last obliged to retire, and to abandon the St. Charles totally, which proceeded in her Course the Night following without Disturbance.

The St. Charles received abundance of Shots, both from the Cannon and Small Arms, besides a vast Number of Darts and Arrows, which the Turks let fly at her, and yet she had but 2 Men killed, besides the Wounded. Her Main-Mast suffer'd most, having been gall'd by above 40 Cannon-shot. Her Crew consisted of 250 Men, and the Soldiers on board were but 80, who were part of the Regiment of Charles of Lorain, commanded by Capt. Schilling. The Intrepidity both of the Sailors and Soldiers, and their Constancy in so perilous a Situation, can never be enough commended. The Artillery on board made 518 Discharges, and 5226 Cartridge-shot were spent by the Small Arms. The Turkish Vessels which had pursued the St. Charles all the Night long to the Point of the above-mentioned Island, were so ill accommodated in their Retreat, that two of 'em had like to have sunk to the Bottom, if the others had not come to their Assistance.

The Officers of the Artillery on board the St. Charles, were Captain Kuli, a Neapolitan, 3 Artificers, and 37 Gunners: There were also 4 Lieutenants on board that belong'd to the Regiment of Pallavicini, viz. the Sieur Campitelli, a Knight of Malta, and the Marquis Constanie, both Neapolitans; the Sieur Pensioni de Fiume, and Macnamara, an Irishman. The General Pallavicini, has been complimented in particular upon this Occasion by all the Officers, both Germans and Saxons.

The Letters from Vienna remark, what a good Understanding there is established betwixt that Court and the Bavarian, so that the ike has not been known for a long time; and that in Consequence hereof, the Elector of Bavaria will furnish the Emperor with a considerable Number of his Troops against the next Campaign; and that in the mean time, the Emperor has resolv'd to send the Order of the Golden Fleece to the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, for whom a Collar is actually preparing, which is to be richly adorned with Diamonds, besides the Value of the Fleece alone, which will be very considerable.

They add, that the States of Austria having represented their Inability to make prompt Payment of the Subsidies demanded of them by the Emperor, and humbly requested, that his Majesty would allow them to pay them at three several Terms, viz. in December, January, and February next: The Emperor has granted their Request; and that the Concerts of Musick are very frequent at the Imperial Court, where their Majesties are very fond of hearing Arigoni, the Neapolitan Musician, lately arrived there from London; yet they have resolv'd to save the Expences of Operas at Court on Birth-Days, or other Days of Solemnity, and to content themselves, upon those Occasions, with a Concert, or Serenade.

From Rome they write, that the Pope has consented to create the Patriarch of Lisbon a Cardinal, and that these two Dignities he hereafter annexed for ever to a Prince of the Royal Family of Portugal, provided his Portuguese Majesty engages, on his Part, to regulate the Ecclesiastical Affairs which concern the Kingdom of Portugal, particularly the Collection of Benefices, to the Satisfaction of the Holy See.

They write from Constantinople, that the Populace there clamour for the Continuation of the War, rather than to accept of the Preliminaries proposed for a Peace by the Ministers of the Emperor and the Czarina, and that the English and Dutch Ambassadors are returned thither from the Congress at Nimirow.

From the London Gazette.

Vienna, Oct. 24. N. S. O. Saturday last, late in the Evening, Count Pertusati, an Adjutant General to Count Seckendorff, arrived here with Advice, that the Turks, who had been at the Action with Count Khevenhuller upon the River Timock, having been considerably reinforced at Widdin, had turn'd towards Nissa, after having taken the Post of Passo Augusto, where they cut to Pieces a Battalion of Bareuth, which was there in Garison; that they had immediately surrounded the Town of Nissa, and summoned General Doxat, who commands there, to surrender the Place, acquainting him at the same Time, that besides the Troops that were already there, they expected every Day a numerous Army, with a great Train of Artillery; that the Commandant refused to surrender, but after several Messages sent forward and backward, they agreed, that if the said Turkish Army appeared before the Place, if there were no Hopes of being succoured, and if the General of the Imperial Army Count Seckendorff consented to it, he, M. Doxat, would then surrender the Place, if he might have an honourable Capitulation; upon which Hostages were given reciprocally, and General Doxat sent an Express to Marshal Seckendorff, who sent Count Pertusati hither to receive Orders whether the whole Army shall march to succour Nissa, or not. A Council of War was held here upon this Occasion on Sunday last, and the Day following a Courier was sent to General Doxat, with Orders that are not yet divulged. Count Seckendorff was to leave the Command of the Army on the 20th Instant, and to set out for this Place.

Vienna, Oct. 26. N. S. Count Seckendorff's Secretary arrived here this Morning, and the Marshal himself will be here To-morrow Night; he brings General Diemar with him, pretty well recovered of the Wound he received before Ofen: According to Count Seckendorff's Secretary's Report, Nissa was not surrendered on the 16th Instant.
